

future perspectives

TUESDAY 28th MARCH 2017 – EVENT SYNOPSIS

---

Governance

Presented by Malcolm Boyd

Research on nonprofit boards and governance has developed substantially in the past decade, and important insights have emerged as scholars and practitioners from a wide range of disciplines and fields are providing rigorous and new knowledge about governance and boards. Significant progress notwithstanding, practitioners and scholars alike continue to find it a challenge to understand the complex and changing nature of nonprofit governance and the boards that engage in it.

Critical thought leadership is required in the following:

- Global governance standard development
- Synergistic codes of good practice
- Professionalism and career paths
- Scrutiny of governing body impact

Fundraising

Presented by Colin Habberton

As the world continues to experience shifts in people, politics and problems and with that the products and services people consume, causes and their need for funds must be able to compete for time, attention and support. The session will look at what it will take for organisations to remain relevant and how the for purpose sector may be best equipped to respond to the inevitable change and challenges ahead.

Participants will walk away with some insight into harnessing the change taking place around them and how technology, access to information and an open mind are keys to success in the connected, converging world we all live in. It aims to inspire leaders to recognise their strengths, develop their skills and inspire their work.

Leadership

Presented by George Zacharias

The organisation of leadership structures within the Non Profit sector generally follows the strict requirements of the organisation's governing legislation including the relevant Companies Act as well as Trust and Taxation legislation. The need to comply with legislation often leads to an organisational structure which is inflexible and not entirely suited for the optimal leadership of the organisation.

A potential Non Profit leadership model will be presented at the event, followed by a facilitated discussion during which event participants will be encouraged to give their views as well as their perspectives on future structures for the optimal leadership of Non Profit Organisations.

